If climate change is something that concerns you, then the best place to start dealing with it is from the inside of your own home: indeed, the majority of buildings literally guzzle energy and as a consequence, churn out way more carbon dioxide into the atmosphere than the transport sector does. In this context, Kerakoll embarked in 2000 on a preliminary study of the environmental impact of chemical building products. Drawing on the many existing studies and reports published on the effect these products have on the environment, the GreenBuilding rating was developed.
